TELLS CHAUTAUQUA AUDIENCE OF NEW ZEALAND'S CIVIC WELFARE PLANS

Some points in New Zealand's progress in constructive co-operative evolution of a democracy were described Tuesday night by Hon. Charles H. Poole, who gave an instructive lecture upon Social Redemption in the first evening programme in opening the Chautanqua here this season. Mr. Poole, who has represented West Auckland in the New Zealand parliament for a number of terms, interspersed many with touches with the serious and thoughful aide of his lecture and had the close attention of a good sized audience in the tent on the Academy campus.

New Englanders, he said, should have a bond of special interest in New Zealand for the hardy New England whalers and traders were among the saffiest white people to visit that country and in later years the New England contibution to New Zealand was very valuable, indeed. He characterised the New Zealand plan as a government of co-operation which had brought that country to be one of the most advanced democracies in the world. It makes the material walfare of its people a matter of governmental interest and was the first country to grant the emancipation of women, who had been classed with lunation and criminals in their exclusion from the ballot. Wemen had projected a wonderful moral element into the life of that country. If you neglect domestic legislation, said. Poole, you plant the seeds for a dangerous element of discontent.

In which to pay for the home. Scientific finance in the use of millions of money has done this and the state has never lost a penny by it.

New Zealand is also, said Mr. Poole, trying to combat the go-to-the-city fever in the young people, getting them to this places in the country instead of crowding into the congested city life. One of the troubles of mode's life is that the old people with common sense have gone to the city.

The speaker touched upon the question of state ownership of public utilities and said he once used to advocate this, but he believed now this was being succeeded by co-operation and profit sharing. Give the people a vital financial litierest in the job to which they have given their lives and then you'll see how fast the wheles will go round.

GRANTS STAY IN ISSUE OF DIVORCE FROM LUMBER KING Mrs. Belie Stanton McLaughlin, who formerly lived at East Great Plain, and married James McLaughlin, knewn as the "iumber king" of Cumberland R. I. has just won a decision in the Rhode Island supreme court which checks the issue of a final decree of divorce. "The state strongly desires a continuation of the marriage relation. And hence is unfavorable to divorce." say: Chief Justice William H. Swestland if the Rhode Island supreme court in an opinion handed down last week. "When, however, one of the parties has been guilty of scrious fault subversive of the marriage and the other is entirely blameters, then the law will permit a divorce, but upon the prayer of the innocent spouse only."

Commenting further upon the altitude of the state reserving divorce, the opinion declares that "a petition for divorce seeks to set aside a relation which the state desires shall continue for the good of scelety. In every proceeding for divorce the state is a party and the action has been called a triangular sout, with the interests of the state under the protection of the court."

Belle Stanton McLaughlin petitioned for a divorce from her husband, James McLaughlin. In the superior court, decision was rendered in her favor Sept. 27, 1721, on the grounds of extreme crucity and neglect to provide. Allmony was fixed at $25,00 as well as an allowance pending the illigation.
